

Serving in the Commando Logistic Regiment Royal Marines

Serving in 3 Commando Brigade is a unique experience, both challenging and rewarding and one that you will struggle to find elsewhere within the Corps. The RLC has postings at Logistic Support (LS) Squadron Commando Logistic Regiment, 24 Regiment Royal Engineers, and 29 Regiment Royal Artillery as well as HQ 3 Commando Brigade. Most RLC ranks serve at the LS Sqn, which is held permanently on five days' notice to move as part of the Lead Commando Group (LCG). There are plenty of deployment opportunities, both on ship and overseas every year, with runs ashore all over the world. This ensures that even if you are not away, the soldiers you're responsible for, or work alongside are busy. The Sqn is unique in the RLC as it does not just work alongside the Royal Marines but is integrated within a Royal Marine Regiment. All new members of the Sqn are therefore encouraged to pass the All Arms Commando Course during their time here and are given every opportunity and help to do so, having the unique chance to undertake some word class training. You do not need to be Commando trained to be posted to LS, you simply must be a good soldier. We have an immensely proud Sqn ethos, encompassing all ranks Commando trained or not.

It is not just that Britain's best beaches are right on your doorstep, with a variety of world class water sports available to you almost all year round, that keeps bringing people back. This is a Sqn that allows you to excel in your trade, grow as a soldier and ultimately offers you the opportunity to become part of the Commando brethren.
